Unemployment in Britain

by Olivia Churchill

The level of unemployment in Britain is now about two and a half million. At the same time, there are about two and a half million foreign nationals working in Britain. Some people think that, if the foreigners went home, there would be no unemployment in the country. 1_____ Some of the jobs need skills or training that the unemployed don't have. Others are seasonal. This means that there is work only at certain times of the year. One problem for the unemployed is that there are lots of complicated forms to fill in before they get any benefit money from the government. 2_____ So, it's much safer and easier to stay unemployed and not do anything than risk losing your benefits. Finally, many people find it difficult to move to a different city to find a job. 3_____ It's a lot to give up for a badly-paid job which might not last very long anyway.

Scientists have found that chocolate contains certain ingredients that make us feel good. They can also reduce stress. When people stop eating it, they feel nervous or sad and so eat more to try to get the nice feeling back.

3 _____

The good thing is that it isn't a physical addiction but a mental one. If we stopped eating chocolate tomorrow nothing terrible would happen to us. The easiest way is to keep it out of the house so that you can't eat it when you're bored.

The term workaholic is used to describe someone who is addicted to work. Shopaholic is a person addicted to shopping. So someone, somewhere decided to make a similar word for chocolate addiction. However, when you think about it, workaholic is made up of work+aholic and shopaholic – shop+aholic. So, shouldn't we say chocolateaholic, instead?
